ANALYSIS

Refugees and migrants are the biggest of Lebanon’s many pressing problems. The country’s small size and its location at the crossroads of Europe and Africa mean that it has always been a transit point for people on the move, but the current crisis has overwhelmed the country’s resources and capabilities. The Lebanese government has been slow to react and has struggled to provide adequate assistance to those in need. The situation has become increasingly critical as the number of refugees and migrants continues to grow, putting a strain on the country’s economy and social fabric. The Lebanese government must take urgent action to address this crisis and prevent a humanitarian disaster from unfolding.

"Tell me about one invention, a woman wrote to me, a refrigerator."

This was a however made by the realities of life in Lebanon, especially for women. The statement was made by the then-Prime Minister, Najib Mikati, on March 1, 2017, during a debate in the Lebanese Parliament about the gender gap. He argued that women should be paid less than men, are more patient, they are too intelligent. "It may not be fair," he said. "But it is the case." The statement was later转发ied on Facebook, saying it was "not true," causing an outrage across the social media platforms.

"It is not true that all women are patient, or that they are too intelligent," a woman wrote in response. "We are not all the same." Mikati's statement was widely condemned, with many calling it patriarchal and discriminatory.
