SABRINA GONZALEZ PASTERSKI

The Genius

PHYSICIST & HARVARD PH.D. CANDIDATE

Astronomer
Gonzalez, 30, has been hailed as the young Einstein by her Harvard professors. She has attended the University of Cambridge, but after earning her undergraduate degree, she chose to pursue physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "I was interested in studying physics because I wanted to understand the universe," she says. "But I also love to learn and to teach."

The Role Model

MICHELLE OBAMA

"There are girls all over the world who are hungry to learn and who take extraordinary risks just to have a chance to fulfill their potential."

"Girls, I'm so proud of you. You've always been successful!" Which is why, in March 2015, she launched Let Girls Learn (GGL), a bold initiative to raise awareness about the fact that, worldwide, 61 million girls are out of school. "There are girls all over the world who are hungry to learn and who take extraordinary risks just to have a chance to fulfill their potential," Obama says. "I want to make it my mission to help them get the education they deserve."

Nearly two years later, GGL has invested more than $50 million in new and existing government programming in over 25 countries, signed 11 agreements—on issues from the U.K. to Mexico and Brazil—on which some are projected to invest an additional $600 million, and enrolled more than 100 companies and organizations to pitch in supplies, expertise, and financial support. Each investment is already making a difference in places where, 30-year-old Sania Boulanger, who used to work eight-hour shifts on a Dutch factory, is now learning to read and write, while an LPG contractor petitioned his parents to enroll him in school in Malawi, where Halima Robert, who was forced to drop out of school at 14, had her coursework assembled and returned to her studies thanks to an LGL program that guarantees child marriage. "I carry the stories of the girls I've met with me every day," Obama says. "Their passion, intelligence, and determination are an inspiration to me, and I plan to keep lending my voice to their behalf, just for the rest of my life."

Take action to help girls around the world get an education. Go to engagewithgirls.org to find out how to get involved.

— Michael N. Adams

January 2017, MARIE CLAIRE.COM
EDITOR'S NOTE

Tour de FORCE

’ve said it before, but, hands down, my favorite thing about this job is meeting the extraordinary women we cover at Marie Claire. Sure, I can't complain about the rush of chasing a great story, or the buzz of creative collaboration, or the fun of watching a brand-new collection walk the runway—but if I’m being completely honest, nothing excites me more than meeting women I admire. No matter the story, I am always amazed by how much I learn from their narratives.

From our cover star, Gina Rodriguez, I can say I’ve truly learned the power of dreaming big. We started working together almost a year ago on Marie Claire’s Young Women’s Honors, our first-ever televised awards show, airing December 19 on The CW network. From hearing her stories of growing up with parents who pushed her to pursue education to teaming up over the past year on our shared dream of creating an awards show honoring young women, I have been blown away by Gina’s unflagging energy and positive spirit. And we’re thrilled to announce that Michelle Obama’s Let Girls Learn is our exclusive foundation partner for the show, ensuring that young girls around the world have access to education.

This issue is filled with women who have made outsized impacts on their respective fields, altered history, or changed the world. Check out “100 Moments Women Killed It in 2016” (p. 56). Or Eleanor Freeman, whose taste buds are insured for $37 million (“In Your Dreams,” p. 47). And I invite you to get inspired by our honorees (p. 94), including Madison Maxey, who founded a company that creates “smart” fabrics that will change what our clothes can do; Sabrina Gonzalez Pastorski, a physics superstar who, at 16, became the youngest person to build a plane herself and then fly it; and 25-year-old Amanda Nguyen, who wrote a bill protecting sexual-assault survivors that sailed through Congress (unanimously!) and was enacted into federal law. When my daughter asked Nguyen what she wanted to be when she “grew up,” she replied that she wanted to be either an astronaut or president of the United States. Talk about inspiration.

Tell me what you love, don’t love so much, or want to see more of in Marie Claire. I want to hear it all! Bear with me if I don’t respond immediately.

Anne Fulenwider
EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
annefulenwider@marieclaire.com

OK, NOW TALK TO ME!
Dear Sabrina,

On behalf of Golden Globe–winning actress Gina Rodriguez, cofounder and executive producer of Marie Claire’s Young Women’s Honors, and Anne Fulenwider, Editor-in-Chief of Marie Claire, it is our great pleasure to inform you that you have been selected to be one of our inaugural honorees. We would be thrilled for you to be part of this new global platform that celebrates the achievement, drive, and greatness of young women around the world. The mission of Young Women’s Honors is to promote positivity and inclusivity and to underscore that every woman is born with unlimited potential and possibility. You are the epitome of what this show represents.

Chosen by a distinguished panel of leaders, each of our honorees is being recognized for her exceptional accomplishments that serve as an inspiration to other young women who may follow her example and blaze trails of their own. From icons to influencers, athletes to activists, our show spotlights young women making a vital difference to better their communities and the world. As Gina says, “When you see someone following their dreams, it allows you to follow your own.”

We invite you to accept your award in person on Saturday, November 19, in Santa Monica, California, at the Barker Hangar, where the ceremony will be taped. We will feature your story on the CW Network broadcast or webcast on December 19. We are of course happy to cover your travel expenses.

In addition, Young Women’s Honors has partnered with the preeminent women’s magazine, Marie Claire, which will feature a portfolio of the honorees in its January 2017 issue to coincide with the broadcast. We are hopeful you will be able to join Gina for a photo shoot of our honorees, which will take place in Los Angeles on Sunday, October 9, as well as do a brief phone interview by the end of September. Should you not be available in Los Angeles on this date, we will discuss alternative options for your inclusion.

Congratulations on this recognition of your commitment to excellence. I am happy to answer any questions you may have and look forward to hearing back from you as soon as possible.

With great appreciation,

Gina Rodriguez, Anne Fulenwider & The YWH Team